

A New Beginning

Beginning October 1, 2012, the Institute for Population Health (IPH) became the entity through which residents of the City of Detroit receive public health services. Detroit has already seen the tremendous benefits that a non-profit model of service delivery can provide for its residents. For example, reduced administrative costs have allowed a greater proportion of funds to be dedicated to direct patient services, while retaining jobs and public health authority in Detroit. As an independent organization, IPH is an efficient, nimble organization to handle grant funds and revenues for many years to come.
